

Volume 3, Number 2
Summer 2007
Inside DoD

Become a Member of the DoD Corrosion Exchange

Membership in the DoD Corrosion Exchange (DoDCE) is free and open to individuals from the DoD, other federal, state, and local government agencies, and academicians. It is also open to researchers from commercial, non-profit, or educational organizations, as well as individuals from industry who have an interest in corrosion.

Listed below are the five steps necessary to become a member of the DoDCE:

1. Select the Become a Member menu item located at the bottom left of the page at www.DoDCorrosionExchange.org
2. Agree to the DoDCE Web site anti-spam policy.
3. Complete all required fields in the membership application form.
4. Submit the form via the DoDCE Web site to the DoDCE Member Services manager for review, verification, and approval.
5. Be available to confirm and validate the application via telephone with the DoDCE Member Services manager.

Because the information in the form also serves as the member profile, applicants are encouraged to complete all fields in the self-registration process, not just the required fields. The Member Services manager will disapprove all unverifiable or incomplete membership applications.